is on one of the most interesting dainage systems in America. The river rises about 290 miles farther north and at the railroad crossing is a stream of considerable size, having an average flow of 2,256 cubic feet a second. About 540 miles farther south it joins Grand River to form the Colorado, which, after winding through more than a thousand miles of the most wonderful canyon scenery in the world, reaches the Gulf of California.

From the town of Green River Maj. J. W. Powell, afterwards Director of the United States Geological Survey, started May 24, 1862, with his little company of daring associates to explore the canyons of the Colorado. The story of the trip is well know, but from the simple, unimpassioned language in which Maj. Powell himself tells it, the reader might not realize that this was one of the most hazardous undertakings in the bistory of modern exploration. Few have cared to undertake the adventure since, and some of those have paid for their temerity with their lives. The journey has recently been successfully repeated, however, by two photographers, Ellsworth and Emery Kolb, who on September 3, 1911, also started from Green River and, after numerous adventures, emerged from the canyons with a valuable collection of negatives and moving-picture films.

In a few minutes the prospective bridegroom returned and gave information that he did not want the license and that the marriage was called off. He declared the information given by his wife-to-be was news to him, as she had never told him that she had been married and was divorced and that she was not the kind of a woman he wanted for a wife. She had already deceived him on that point and he proposed to get away from her while the going was good.

Task of Cleaning Cars. An idea of the magnitude of the work involved in railway operation was remently shown by H. A. Johnson, master mechanic of the Chicago Elevated Railways, who stated that the ordinary housewife with a five-room apartment considered it quite a task to keep clean Philo Hard, who left Norwich Town a year ago to reside in Aurora near Chicago, writes: A deluge of rain for the last fortnight with cold weather in Miss s, leaves in Drive a posinor re
The real anchovy (Stolephorus encrasicholus) occurs only rarely in Swedish waters, but another species of small herring, the sprat (Clupea spratus), occurs along both the west and the east coasis and is prepared, in the Province of Bohuslan, in the saited and spiced form known as "anajovis."

As the domestic supply of the raw material is not always sufficient, considered it quite a task to keep clean ten or fifteen windows, but he had $2,000 windows to wash. Moreover, the duty of scrubbing floors in a home was onerous, but what would the house-wife think if she had $6,000 square feet of floor to scrub, as much floor as would ordinarily be in 1200 apartment. Wr. Johnson pointed out the bigness of the equipment maintenance task by stating that if all the elevated result of the sprate tips, occurs along both the west and the east coasis and is prepared, in the Province of Bohuslan, in the saited and spiced form known as "anajovis."
